A Biographical Sketch of Profcssor March.

FRANCIS ANDREW MARCH, SR., was born in the village ci Millbury, Mass., October 25,1825. in his boyhood he evinced a decided taste for literature, and, his ambitions beir.g fostered, he improved his cpportunities so well that in 1345 he was graduated from Amherst College, which in 1348 bestowed upon him the degree of A M. He entered upon the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1850, but ill health compelled him to give up an excellent practice, whereupon he turned to his favcrite studies, philosophy, language and literature, in which he very soon gained permanent fame amony colleges and learned persons of both Europe and America. In 1870 the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Princeton, and in 1871 by Amberst. In 1887 Columbia honored him with the dogree of L.H.D. and in 1396 he received from Oxford. England, the title of D.C.L., and from Cambridge, England, and also from Princeton, the same year, the very distinguished degree of Litt D.

Professor March was called to the chair of English Language and Comparative Philology of Lafayette College. in 1857. which he has ever since occupied despite offers from the greatest colleges of the world. He is a pioneer in the study of English Classics and English Literature, and is regarded as the first authority living on derivation, spolling, definition and grammar, and as a linguist he has had no equal since the death of Max Müller. He was elected president of the American Philological Association in 1873. and again in 1896, and has served as president of the Spelling Reform Association since its organization in 1876. He succeeded James Russell Lovecii as prosident of the Modern Language Association of America, in 1891; is Vice-President of the New Shakspere Society, London, and an honorary member of the Philological Society, Lendon, and L'Association Fonetique de Professeurs de Langues Vivants, Paris. He is also Senatur of Phi Reta Kappa, member of the National Council of Education, of the American Philosophical Society, and of the American Antiquarian Society, and Chairman of the Pennsylvania Commission on Amended Orthography. Since 1879 Professe. March is Director of American Readers for the Oxford (Murray's . England. Dictionary, the greatest $\square$ of the kind ever undertaken, and is consulting editer of the Standard Dictionary.

Professor March is the author of many educational works that are used as text books in, most famous colleges of Europe and America. In 1865 Harpers pubiished his "hethod of Phil a he same cf the English Lañuage," and in 1359 ". A Parser and Ana'yzer for Beginners." A year la fis "Anglopublishing house brought out his ". Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxch Language. "fage, and has Saxon Reader." Professor March has contributed largely to magazines on the subject of Saxon Reader." Professor March has contributed largely to magazines on the subject forns with English written numerous learned articles for leading oncyclopedias. He is aiso editor cf "Latin h, Notes," "Eusebius," ..Tertullian," "Athenagoras," and other classics published by Hary. As an Encyclopedist and Lexicographer, Professor March is justly world-famous, and as a linguist a authority on English literature he is, perhaps, without a compeer.

A Foreword by Professor March

In London, 1852, appeared a volume entitled, "Thesaurcs of English Words and Phrases, Classified and Arranged so as to Facilitate the Expression of Ideos and Assist in Literary Composition, by Peter Mork Roget, M. D., F. R. S." It was intended to supply a collection of the words and idiomatic combinations of the English language, "arranged, not in alphobetical order as they are in a dictionary, but according to the ideas which they express," so that any one who has an idea may here find the word or words by which it may be most fitly and aptly expressed. This book has been for holf a century a familiar part of the mochinery used by authors, preachers, lecturers and the like. The number of soch persons has lately increased rapidly. Writing also fills a larger place in our schemes of education. The students of our universities have little time for Socratic dialogue; they hand in essays day by day, and close their careers with original theses as heavy as articles in the quarterlies. Mr. J. W. Buel, who has proved himself to be an accurate observer of the needs of the book-buying public, and who has long used Roget, has thought that its moterial may be prepared and sopplemented for a wider sphere, and has accordingly set on foot the preparation of the present volume.

The first shortcoming in Roget is that there are no definitions of the words or explanations of the phrases. The book is really an index of words to be looked up in dictionaries and cyclopedios, unless one comes to it with his mind thoroughly stored with words and meanings. Besides the single words there ore collected phrases, kennings, and longer fomiliar quotations in English and foreign languages. These ore all helpful to the literary worker. There has been a great accumulation of them in the latest dictionaries, in the Century, the Standard, and in the Oxford Dictionary. The Standard has gone farthest in the collection of groups of words, giving, for example, groups of names of apples, and coins, and structures, and animols. The Oxford prints the most numerous phrases, and adds quotations containing them which exhibit their biographies. The time seems ripe for a Thesaurus, bringing together groups of them, accompanied by concise definitions giving in each group the meaning of each word as used in the group.

Then there is difficulty with the machinery for finding any particular word or phrase. Early vocabularies often consist of groups arranged by their ideos. That of Elfric, a tenth century Anglo-Saxon work, begins with farmers' tools all in a heap; then come ecclesiastical matters, then political, then diseases, then wild beasts, insects, vessels, a room and its contents, and so on. Nothing could be done with the materials of the Oxford Dictionary, or the Century, or Standard, on any such plan. Dictionaries are sometimes arranged according to a philological system. Ettmüller's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary has the words classified under their roots, and the roots and words arranged according to the scientific order of the sounds. The beginner has to master this order of sounds, and then to guess onder what root his word belongs-or rather under what root Ettmüller thinks it belongs. He has, in fact, to learn the language to its depths before he can use the dictionary.

Roget's arrangement is primarily one of nameable objects. "It is impossible we should thoroughly understand the nature of the signs unless we first properly consider and arrange the things signified," is his motto, taken from Horne Tooke's "Diversions of Purley." He classifies nameables, after the manner of the English psychologists, into matter, mind (intellect, volition, affections), space and abstract relations, and divides and subdivides these until he makes out an even thousand divisions, and into these he puts all the words. In order to find any word it was necessary to think out in which subdivision its idea belongs. This is worse than Ettmüller. It was necessary to add a verbal index, alphabetically arranged, with references to the groups by number. It is not easy, indeed, to find a word ofter you know the number of its group, for the group may contain hundreds of words in no manageoble order.

The machinery of a serviceable dictionary is found in the alphabet. The invention of alphabetic writing has been often pronounced the most important ever made. It is not the least of its benefits to mankind that it affords the means of making knowledge accessible. Every one knows the letters of the alphabet. If all thoughts are arranged onder their words, and the words arranged in alphabetic order, any one can find off-hand any of the million facts and thoughts which are stored in the dictionary. The use of the simple alphobetic order is almost as importont an invention as the representation of words by single signs of their elementary sounds.

The material of this Thesaurus has been brought to alphabetic order. Our publisher suggested that it be called a THESAURUS DICTIONARY, believing that the word "Thesaurus" will easily assume the meaning of groups, and "Dictionary" that of alphabetic arrangement.

In using the Thesaurus Dictionary, look up any word connected with your subject in its alphabetic place in the vocabulary list in larger black type, exactly as in a common dictionary. Anger, for example, is found thos on page 45. It is there briefly defined as a violent passion, and two groups to which it belongs are then mentioned in small capitals, Excitability-Inexcitability and Fayorite-Anger. To study the first group torn to excitability-inexcitability in its alphabetical place in the general vocabulary, page 372. There, onder this heading, are two parallel columns, the left-hand for excitability, the right for inexcitability, each ronning on for a couple of pages and bringing together some one hondred and fifty words and phrases. These are divided into nouns, verbs, verbal phrases, adjectives, etc., arranged in alphabetic order. The first column contains all words and phrases naturally associated according to the laws of similarity, contiguity and comprehension.-synonyms and the like; the second column contains a similar group related to the first column according to the law of contrast,-antonyms, polar opposites, and the like. By means of cross-references, other groups of associated meaning are brought to the attention.

A large collection of groups like these, printed without alphabetic order and without definitions, notes or comments, constitutes the Thesaurus of Roget or the Dictionnaire Idéologique of Robertson. It is obvious that this is really an index of words to be studied in other dictionaries, unless the student be thoroughly stored beforehand with words and meanings.

An attempt has been made in this volume to give the less accomplished student forther help in his handling of the groups, and his use of them for original work. In the first place the words and phrases are defined. The dictionaries try first to state, with exactness and clearness, the thought for which each word stands. The student of literature or oratory knows that putting together these dictionary definitions does not give the full force of the great passages. When words are idiomatically put together, the combination is not agglutinative; relations between the words appear, and the result is not a mechanical compound, but chemical, or, rather, vital, especially when the melody of the voice is added.

The definition is an idea, o solid intellectual center; the emotions which have been felt with it rise in memory with it, and give it an aureole, o halo, a nimbus, a glory, spheres of radiance. A word is thus a living power, with an individuality embodied in its root and affixes. It has a history; it has a character derived from its history. Every familiar phrase in which it occurs, every great passage in literature in which it is found, every great occasion with which it is associated, every honored name with which it is connected adds to its charm. Every happy phrase in Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyord" adds to the charm of every other. Every resonant word in the Declaration of Independence, or in Webster's Speech for Liberty and Union, has new power, and when the great orator repeats the magic words of Milton and Shakespeare he redoubles their harmonies. Every kind of favorable influence combines to strengthen and beautify the moving idiom of our English Bible.

In order to aid workers in literature to perceive and enjoy these associations, the definitions here given are often turned so as to suggest the original thought of the word, the beginning of its history, especially if it is derived from the name of some person or place worthy of renown. In the group of words we have mentioned under Excitability are Quixotism, chivalry run mad in amiable madness, as in "Don Quixote" of Cervontes; Agony, like that of $a$ wrestler in the Olympic games; Patience on a monument, defined as " smiling at grief," and given its Shakespearian grace by reference to "Twelfth Night" ii, 4. There is Stoicism, dignifying the "Stoic of the Woods, the man without a tear," in Campbell's "Gertrude of Wyoming," and there are Chaucer's "making a virtue of necessity;" Inextinguishable laughter of the gods, from Homer, "Iliad I, 268"; Volcanic. like the chimney of the forge of Vulcan; the Bible's itching ears;

Shakespeare's itching palm; Kens aequa in arduis, "equanimity in difficulties," the trait of Warren Hastings recorded on his portrait at Calcutta.

In the reign of Queen Anne Englishmen spoke of living in the Augustan age of the Engfish language; they thought it had reached perfection, and they wanted a dictionary that should record the words then in use and be a standard for future generations. Dr. Johnson's great dictionary was widely accepted as such a standard. Authors of eminence were careful not to use any word not in Johnson. Critics pounced upon every writer who strayed from the standard. Slang was deadly sin. The golden age was to be kept pure from it forever. There are still survivors of this period. Not long ago the "Sunday School Times" sent out an inquiry about tireless and some eminent authors answered that they had thought it good, but since it was not in Worcester or Webster, they would not use it.

Bet we have changed all that. We see that a language must change with each generadion. If it is to live it must be supplied with a constant inflow of new words, of which a vital part comes from the feeling and imagination of persons who utter themselves in slang. A living language is a lake from which there is a constant flow of words to the ocean of oblivion, and which has a constant supply from the fountain of popular talk.

During the lost half century more new words and phrases have poured into the English language than in any century before; new arts and new sciences have swollen the inflow. In this volume many new words will be found added to the old groups, and a number of new groups have been gathered, chiefly words of the expanding sciences, such as biology, chemistry, and electricity. These we cordially commend to the attention and use of all students.

Those who may find expressions which they recognize as living slang worthy of longer life, we advise to use it with some token, as Lord Bacon does, when he says, "It is a dull thing to tire, and, as we say now, to jade anything too far."

PUBLISHER'S PREFACE

Of the making of books there is no limit, but like the great numbers of fish in the sea, it is the comparatively few that are worth the taking. The most valuable are those that give us the most useful information, and such as we have most frequently to consult. An encyclopedia is extremely valuable, lut it is not so neeessary for reference as a dietionary, nor is any other book so beneficial for serving our daity necds. Tol live without a dictionary is to lee deprived of the means of understanding what we real, and, very often, what we hear. It is, indeed, the indispensable requisite of every home.

Professor Mareh's Thesaurus Dictionary is a work produced by the most fammen, beeause the most learned, lexicographer not only of Imerica, but of the world. The service which Wehster performed, in giving us a good American lictionary, which has served to enlarge our vocatulary and therely the better qualify us to express our thoughts, is one that entitles his memory to unfading praise. But great as was Webster's work, for the lenefits named, that of Professor March is a distinct and no less important step, forward in helpfulness to a knowledge of the English Language, for his dietionary not only prints definitions, hut the chicf purpose of his Thesaurus is to enable those who use it for reference to lave at their command the exact words required to definitely and forcibly express any ilea they may wish to convey. What man or woman, however learned or experiencel, has mastered all, or more than a small fraction, of the words that make up the total of the English language? It is not difficult to imagine with what veneration the work would hold a person who is ahle to properly use, at will, every word printed in unabridged dictionaries.

EMBARRASSMENTS OF AN INADEQUATE VOCABULARY

We observe the small child trying to express its thoughts, or longings, and smile at its use of inapt terms and its frequent repetitions. The child has as yet learned the use of only a few words, and this small vocabulary renders it necessary to make one word serve several meanings. The very lit tle knowledge that the chikl manifests is comparative only, for we as often see men of good intelligence, and of clueation as well, who for lack of an arlequate vocabulary halt, repeat and stumble, and make use of words that have small relevancy, in an effort to express an idea, or deseribe a fact or thing.

But the diffeulty of always recaling, or knowing the right word needed to conver exactly our thoughts, is one which even the most fluent speakers and the most lued writers encounter with such frequency that search for the one wor! prarticularly desire! for the oceasion occupies so much of their time that their minds are kept unon a great strain; or, as Richard Le Gallienne has de.clared, "the search often becomes something like a tragedy." Indeed, it is said that Flaubert, one of the most exact of French writers, sacrificerl his life in the ardent pursuit of particular words.

The difficulty of selecting proper worls in attempts to precisely convey our thoughts to others comes from inadequacy on the one hand, and exaggeration on the other. Ordinarily, we may be able to make ourselves understood, even with a limited vocabulary, but it very frequently haprens, even to the most scholarly, that words are needed for uses and situations both subtle and complex, and then it is that deficiency in word knowledge becomes a matter of intense irritation.

The English language is so rich that for every fact and feeling there is an exact word; a word in shape, size, color, and sound, that absolutely and uniquely embodies the fact and feeling one desires to express. In short, the "unique," or exact word, is the very philosopher's stone of literature, and thus it is that the search for it is a life-time pursuit, followed with persistency and a sense of profound annoyance, by all who write or speak.

But the scholarly writer, who has more frequent occasion to employ unusual words, and therefore has need for the larger vocabulary, finds it quite as difficult to express himself as does the ordinary business man, mechanic, farmer, or pupil. Indeed, as our professions and pursuits modify our educational requirements, all persons in the range between the most highly cultured and the least educated, find equal difficulty in recalling, on the moment, appropriate words necessary to express ideas with definiteness.

For more than four centuries, as several cumbersome compilations of old lexicographers show, efforts have been made to produce a book that would give immediate use of a comprehensive vocabulary, but all such works of dictionary-makers were failures, so complete as to be of little or no more use than the crude dictionaries of the times themselves. It must be apparent that such a book, for great usefulness, must not only contain an unabridged collection of related words, in alphabetical arrangement, but also the definition and pronunciation of each word, so that when found its proper use is at once determined, without need of referring to a dictionary for an explanation of the meaning. All the objections to previous compilations are removed by Professor F. A. March's "Thesaurus Dictionary of the English Language," and besides making his work a very marvel of word gathering, he has added many relevant features which serve to justify the claim that, for its purposes, no book ever before published exceeds it in practical value and real importance.

The production of a dictionary is an enterprise that necessarily involves an enormous expenditure of money, and the employment of the best talent obtainable. But the compilation of a Thesaurus Dictionary is a superlative work of importance and complexity, which requires the very highest order of learning and the most critical accuracy in its several features of spelling, pronunciation, concise definition, and shades of difference in the signification of related, or so-called synonymous terms. These attentions are extremely necessary, as every one must appreciate, but infinitely more exhaustive and critical is the labor of bringing together into close and alphabetical association, for prompt reference, all the words of the English language in their respective relationships of significance.

Webster's Dictionary provides a means whereby we may quickly ascertain the meaning of any word in our language. Professor March's Thesaurus gives the same knowledge, but in addition thereto it enables any one to reclaim a word forgotten; to recover and correctly use a word needed to convey exactly an idea. Every day you are vexed $b y$ vain efforts to recall a word, which you may know exists, that will definitely, precisely, express an idea which you wish to convey. Everybody is troubled in the same way. Well, by the quick aid of the Thesaurus Dictionary you can promptly find the needed word, quite as easy as it is to find the definition of a given word in Webster's. More than this even, this Thesaurus will suggest a word which you may require; to find any term it is necessary merely to refer to a simple word that has some relation, in significance, to the idea sought to be conveyed, whereupon you are directed, by reference words, printed in small capital letters, to the captions under which will le found all the words that have any affinity to the sulject in mind. This is accomplished by a practical system of alphabetic grouping of all words of our language according to their relationships in meaning.

Or, to explain more lucidly, a word is taken; for example, let the word be "Good" or "Goodness," page 400. We turn to this word in its alphabetical arrangement, just as in any dictionary, and there we find it given, with definition, but immediately following we find also every important word in our language that has any relationship to "Goodness." And besides the words and definitions under the caption "Goodness" we find also the foreign phrases-all phonetically pronounced-that one is liable to meet with in reading upon a subject allied to "Goodness." Moreover, it will be noticed that in the column directly opposite the caption word is "Badness," or the antithesis of "Goolness," and under that term will be found every important word in our language that is associated with evil, together also with the foreign phrases applicable thereto.

Thus it will he observed that to facilitate the seareh for particular words needel, this system of grouping all related terms is perfected by printing all worls alphabetically, and also by placing the positive term with its negative in parallel oolumns. Thus, in the example given, Goonsess is the caption worl of one column, with all its kindred terms following, while in the opposite parallel column, appears the antithetical caption, bansess, with its related terms. We will find the same category of worls of related signiticance if we refer to any word that has affinity in meaning for either "good" or "had."

Any word followed $u_{p}$, in the Thesaurus will serve to illustrate how this great service is performed, and, for a specific example, let us take the positive and negative terms, "Fuith-Misgiving," page $3^{89}$, and three pages following. Here you will find, under this eaption, every word, synonym and its opposite, that has any relationship, in significance, to these two terms, a list which comprises 350 words and phrases. This list is multiplied by following the correlated divisions under such captions as "Godliness-Ungodliness," page 454 ; "Bisotry-1postesy," page 106; "UP-rightness-Jishonesty," page 1123 ; "Orthodory-Heteroloxy," jage 739; "Carclessmess-Skepticism," ance," page 719 , etc. Similarly there is a complete list of all kindred words pertaining to the subjects: "Beauty-Ugliness," page 92 ; "(roation-l)estruction," page 237; "Lffucnce-l'entry," page 27 ; " -1 stronomy," page 75 , ete. It will le noticed also that while all associated words are given alphabetically, each one is concisely defined so as to show clearly the different shades of meaning. Besides this, you will tind incorporated in the extensive eategory of related terms,

The Thesaurus Dictionary is, of course, of most pronounced value to professional people, the author, jourmalist, lawyer, minister, public speakers, teachers; in short, to those who write mont, but its uschumess to all classes is excemtingly great. All men and women, as well as all boys aml girls, are trying to increase their knowledge, for the more we know, eithor lis stuly or experience, the letter qualified we become to deal with practical affairs of life.

Stulents need the Thesaurus Distionary more than they do any other 1 onk; mot beause it is a working dietionary, hat especially hecame it enables them to write am? an sueak with precision, accuracy and elegance. It qualifies them, without stude, to prepare essays, to handle subjects, to make themselves prime factors in public life; this service it performs he enlarging their vocabulary, ly making them masters of the language, and hy suggesting ideas that lie crystallized in words. It is likewise an inspiration, encouraging to loftiest efforts, for the student who once becomes imbucl with the spirit of authorship, is pretty certain to develop into a person of marked influence and prominent importance.

The man or woman who writes for the press, or who speaks in public, will find the Thesaurus Dictionary an aid of inestimalle value. Consultation of its rocahulary lists of relatel terms, in the search for a word required to express exactly a given idea, nut only results in finding the definite term desired, but also in suggesting new ideas, for it very often happens to writers that a sudden calling to mind of a specially significant word leads to a fresh line of thought or may even modify preconceived opinions.

The Thesaurus Dictionary is, of course, of most pronounced value to professional Ierople, the author, jourmalist, lawyer, minister, public speakers, teachers; in short, to those who write most, hut its usefulness to all classes is exceedingly great. All men and women, as well as all boys and girls, are trying to increase their knowledge, for the more we know, either lis stuly or experience, the letter qualified we become to deal with practical affairs of life.

Students need the Thesaurus Dictionary more than they do any other look; not because it is a working dietionary, but especially lecause it cnables them to write and to speak with precision, accuracy and elegance. It qualifies them, without stuly, to prepare essays, to handle subjects, to make themselves prime factors in public life; this service it performs ly enlarging their vocabulary, by making them masters of the language, and ly suggesting ideas that lie crystallized in words. It is likewise an inspiration, encouraging to loftiest efforts, for the student who once becomes imbued with the spirit of authorship is pretty certain to develop into a person of marked influence and prominent importance.

The man or woman who writes for the press, or who speaks in publie, will find the Thesaurus Dictionary an aid of inestimable value. Consultation of its vocatulary lists of related terms, in the search for a word required to express exactly a given idea, not only results in finding the definite term desired, but also in suggesting new ideas, for it very often happens to writers that a sudden calling to mind of a specially significant word leads to a fresh line of thought or may even modify preconceived opinions.

No other book is such a stimulus to the child at school, and no other confers so many distinct benefits. When a pupil is required by its teacher to prepare a composition, embarrassment is great because the child has few ideas and a knowledge of few words with which to express them. By the aid of the Thesaurus these obstacles to composition are immediately removed, for a subject being given by its teacher, the child may turn to a word related to the subject, under which it will find at once every word, with definition, that appertains in anywise to the subject and by so doing it acquires a copious vocabulary for its purpose, as well also many new ideas that are suggested by the information thus obtained. There is no subject, whether simple, profound, technical; whether it concerns the animal, the vegetable, or the mineral kingdoms; whether it touches upon science, social problems, political economy, faith, doctrine, home-life, marriage, affection, agriculture, mechanics, war, history, poetry, school,-in short it matters not what the subject may be, by consulting this Thesaurus the child obtains, almost at a glance, all the words, and very much of the information, that is needed to write about it intelligently. At the same time the child also learns how to construct its sentences grammatically. This acquisition of a large vocabulary will influence a majority of children to aspire to authorship, and inevitably lead to investigation and scholarship, an important consideration.

They are few who understand the grammar of our language. One may have an extensive vocabulary and yet be unable to write or speak correctly. The Thesaurus Dictionary not only affords the means of chonsing the right word at the right time, and of giving complete mastery of every term in our language for immediate use, but it also presents the words, names the parts of speech, gives concise definitions in every case, prints all the synonyms and their opposites, and shows all words and phrases in their grammatical relationships.The English language is a rapidly growing one. Dr. Johnson's Dictionary contained nearly one hundred thousand words, whereas to-day the largest dictionary has three hundred thousand words. This rapid increase is due to the incorporation of slang words, progress, and discoveries in science, and coinages by the ignorant no less than by the learned. The Thesaurus Dictionary, being the very latest compilation, contains all the recent additions, including terms used in electricity, radiography, automobiling, telephony, sciencc, signaling, commerce, political economy, questions of the day; in fact, of every acquisition, in science, society, business and government; and in giving the definitions of terms it imparts most instructive information.

Every reader is almost constantly meeting with words or phrases of foreign speech, of which neither translation nor pronunciation is given. This is a matter of intense annoyance to persons who cannot translate for themselves, as the use of such interjections often destroys the sense of connection in the reading. In the Thesaurus Dictionary you will find all such words and phrases, in French, Gcrman, Spanish, Italian, Latin, Greek, not only fully translated but also phonetically, hence most exactly pronounced.

The Thesaurus Dictionary of the English Language is presented by the publishers with the sincere belief that its uniqueness will commend it less than the real practical value it will be found to afford all who consult its pages. Expense has not been spared in the preparation, either in the compilation or mechanical production, because so great a conception as the work embodies is worthy the most perfect realization.

A Key to Egyptian Characters

The Rosetta Stone contains a decree that is written in three totally different st yles of characters, namely, hieroglyphic, demotic and Greek; the first was used by the priesthood and by learned Egyptians, the second was the form of writing employed by the common people, while the Greek was used upon this occasion to communicate the lecree to forigners. It was by comparing the hieroglyphic and demotic, which could not at the time be read, with the Greek, which was well known, that Champollion discovered the ley to hieroglyphic writing.

THE EVOLUTION OF WRITING

The means of communicating desires, ideas, information by one person to another, and especially the means of transmitting such expressions between individuals, constitute one of the most, probably the very most, interesting phase of race development. Speech, no doubt, came naturally, even as feeling and desire, but writing was born of necessity, or, rather, invented to meet an indispensable need. The evolution of writing, from crude symbolism, and pictorial representation of objects, used by the earliest peoples, is almost obtrusively, persistently, interesting to all intelligent persons, for the advance of civilization, with all that it implies, is not more certainly and objectively shown than by the written records graven on stone, scratched on hone, impressed in bricks, painted on papyrus, and traced on scrolls, that bestrew the path of the millenniums of human existence. Some of the very antique examples of writing are here exhibited, and the few illustrations printed serve admirably to show the gradual advance made in the improved means devised for communicating commands, recording facts, and expressing sentiments.

THE ROSETTA STONE

Nothing is left of Egyptian buildings except their graves and temples. These, by their inscriptions, were destined to revive interest in the ancient civilization of Egypt. The knowledge of the writings and speech of ancient Egypt had long ago been entirely forgotten. It was left to the nineteenth century to find the key for deciphering the old Egyptian hieroglyphic writings.

France deserves especial mention as having been the first to show an interest in this study, and it is to a Frenchman that we owe the first attempt at a scientific study of the subject. The capital of France, too, was the first seat devoted to the pursuit of these studies under the leadership of François Champollion, the founder of the science, and his successors, Emmanuel de Rougé and G. Maspero.

The era of scientific investigation of Egyptian affairs begins with Napoleon Bonaparte and François Champollion. Leibnitz, the famous German philosopher, was the first to arouse the interest of Louis XIV. by a memoir on Egypt, which Napoleon is said to have found in the royal Archives and made use of in his Egyptian expedition. He set sail on the 19 th of May, 1798, accompanied by a number of learned men. The results of the scientific investigations were published in a work of thirty-six volumes, twelve volumes of illustrations, and twenty-four of text, entitled " Description de l'Egypte, ou recueil des observations et des recherches pendant l'expedition de l'armée Française." This gave a great impetus to Egyptian studies. It is safe to say that with this work, and with the investigations conducted in connection with the discovery of the famous Rosetta stone during the same expedition by a French engineer in $\mathbf{I}_{799}$, begins the scientific study of a branch of learning leading with certain aim to a complete explanation of Egyptian antiquity.A great deal of matter is found concerning Egypt in ancient and mediaeval literature-Greek, Christian, and Arabic, but it is of no scientific value. As far as the eighteenth century no one succeeded in deciphering any of the hieroglyphic writings. Attempts were made and scholars varied to such an extent that while one maintained that a certain inscription dealt with Christian mysteries, another insisted that the subject matter was moral and political maxims, a third made it a festal calendar, and a fourth regarded it as a treatise on the magnet and use of the compass. At this point came the discovery of the Rosetta stone, now in the British Museum.

This stone of dark basalt, now very badly broken at both ends, must have had the same form as that most commonly employed in stones set up in honor of gods and kings as well as in memorials set up in temples and graves. (A restoration of the form of the Rosetta stone in this wise is given in Eduard Meyer's "Geschichte des alten Egyptens," I : page 284.) On this stone a decree of the priests was published in the reign of Ptolemy Epiphanes, which announced that the Egyptian priesthood resolved to thank the young king for the numerous benefits bestowed by him upon the land, and especially upon the Egrptian temples, and they ordered all divine honors to be paid him and his statues, which were to be set up next to those of the chief divinity in all temples of the first, second and third rank. This decree was composed in hieroglyphic signs, and in the so-called demotic, enchoric or epistolographic script of the common people, and a Greek translation was added. That the contents of the three different writings are the same is proved from the conclusion of the Greek text which clearly reads [that the decree shall be engraved on a stele of] hard stone in the sacred writing, in the enchoric and Greek writing, and be set up in every temple of the first, second [and third rank next to the statue of the king, the ever-living]. (The words in the above passage enclosed in square brackets are broken off the stone, but they can with certainty be supplied from the hieroglyphic and demotic text which can now be read.)

In the reign of the young king who received the kingdom from his father, lord of diadems, greatly glorious, who has established Egypt, and pious toward the gods is superior to his enemies, who has set right the life of men, lord of feasts of thirty years, like Hephaestus the great king, like the Sun the great king of both the upper and lower countries, offspring of the gods Philopators, whom Hephaestus approved, to whom the Sun gave victory, the living image of Zeus, son of the Sun, Ptolemy the ever-living, beloved of Phtha; in the ninth year: Aetus, the son of Aetus, being priest of Alexander, of the gods Soters, of the gods Adelphi, of the gods Evergetae, of the gods Philopators, and of the god Epiphanes Eucharistus; the athlophorus of Berenice Evergetes being Pyrrah, daughter of Philinus; the canephorus of Arsinoe Philadelphus, Areia, daughter of Diogenes; the priestess of Arsinoe Philopator being Irene, daughter of Ptolemy; of the month Nandicus, the fourth, but according to the Egyptians, the eighteenth of Mechir-Decree.

InSCRIPTION ON THE SARCOPHAGUS OF ESMUNAZAR, KING OF SIDON

Abstract

On the 20th of February, 1855 , Mr. Peretic, Chancellor of the French Consulate at Beyrouth, Palestine, having undertaken excavations on a pice of ground twenty-five minutes' walk south of Sayda, the ancient Sidon, was informed that his arent hal unearthed there a cotin of black busalt, near a rock against which it rested. Besides the saremphagus, a tuoth, a licce of bonc, and later a human jaw, were found in the rubbish. The sarcophagus its If was of that Egyptian form peculiar $t y$ mummy cases, $i$. c., oblong, like a body wrapped up to the neek in thick lamis, whose heat, cut out widh broad head-dress and straight plaited beard, alone remains uncotered, wearing a rich broad chain in relicf, at cach extremity of which is a head of a sacred hawk, such as one often sees on the nection Eeyptian mummies. But instead of being adomed with hieromlyphics the sarcophagus discoverel he Perti: bears along its whole height an inscription in twenty-two lines, writen in Phenician characters, well fresurel amp written with especial care to avoid confusing letters sumewhat similar in form. As in most Phenician inscriptims the worls are not separated, and this continuity is the only real obstacle to a certain translation.The dimusions of the colin are 2 m .45 cm . by mm .40 cm ., (about S fect $2 \mathrm{i}=\mathrm{m}$. by 4 fict 4 in.) and the inscription which cowss it occupies a syluare of 87 cm . on each side. Snother inscription is found around the head of the proly at the exterior extremity of the sarcophagus which is, howerer, simply a reprouluction of a part of the first insuription.

The inseriptim is that of Fing Esmumazar of Sidon, and is the most important Phanician inscription yet found. Whereas the Phenician inseriptions found hitherto were in the Phenician colonies, this one belonged to the mother conntry. Its importance lies mot only in the fact that it definitely proves the Phonician language to have leen almost ikentical with the llebrew, but it also, more than any other, gives its an insirht into the religious views of the Pinmicians and the political institutions of Siden.

It is a funcral inscription in which Esmunazar, King of Sidon, about $5 \rightarrow 2 \mathrm{~B}$. C. adjures all persons, under pain of eternal dammation, not to disturb his "bed of rest."

 Osiris, overpowered those who in the same parts had revolted in former times; the ringleaders also of the revolters in his father's reign who had troubled the country and outraged the temples, being at Memphis the avenger of his father and of his own crown, all these he punished justly, at the time when he was there for his performance of the rites proper for the reception of the crown: he remitted also the debts owed in the temples to the palace up to the eighth year, amounting to no small quantity of provisions and money; likewise also the value of the linen cloths due which had not been given in to the palace; and, of those which had been given in, the replacement of such as differed from the pattern up to the same date; he released the temples also of the appointed artaba per aroura of the sacred land, and in like manner as to the ceramium per aroura of the vineyards; to Apis and Mneris he made many gifts, as also to the other sacred animals of Egypt, having much better care than the kings before him for what belonged to them in all respects, and giving bountifully and nobly what was proper for their funerals with the dues for the support of their respective worships with sacrifices and panagyries and the other usual rites. The prerogatives of the temples and of Egypt he has carefully kept upon the same basis agrecably to the laws; he has adorned the Apieum with costly works expending upon it of gold and silver and precious stones no small amount, and has founded temples and shrines and altars; what had need of repair he restored, having the disposition of a beneficent god in what concerns the divinity; learning by means of additional enquiry their state he has restored the most honored of the temples; in return for which the gods have given him health, victory, strength, and all other good things, the kingdom being assured to him and his children to all time.With good fortune: It has scemed good to the priests of all the temples of the land to decree to augment greatly all honors now paid to the ever-living King Ptolemy, beloved of Phtha, god Epiphanes Eucharistus, and likewise those of his ancestors the gods Philopators and of his ancestors gods Evergetac and of the gods Adelphi, and those of the gods Soters, to erect of the ever-living King Ptolemy, god Epiphanes Eucharistus, an image in each temple in the most conspicuous place; which shall be entitled "Ptolemy the defender of Egypt," near which shall stand the god to whom the temple belongs, presenting to him a conqucring weapon, which arrangements will be made in the manner of the Egyptians; also for the priests to perform a service before these images three times each day, and put on them the sacred adorning, and perform the other accustomed rites, as to the other gods in the panagyries of Egypt; to set up for King Ptolemy, god Epiphanes Eucharistus, offspring of King Ptolemy and Queen Arsinoe, gods Philopators, a statue and a shrine, both gilded in each of the temples, and to place this in the sanctuaries with the other shrines, and in the great panagyries in which processions of the shrines take place, for the shrine of the god Epiphanes Eucharistus to go out with them; that it may be well marked both now and for future time, to place upon the shrine the ten golden ornaments of the king to which shall be affixed an asp, similar to the adorning of asp-like ornaments which are upon the other shrines in the midst of which shall be the crown called "Schent" which he wore when he entered the temple at Memphis for the performance in it of the rites proper for the assumption of the crown; to place upon the platform of the ornaments about the aforesaid crown ten golden phylacteries on which shall be written "this is

GUDEA, KING OF SHIRPURLA

The statues of Gudea belong to the monuments of Telloh discovered by excavations conducted under the superintendence of Ernest de Sarzec, French consul at Bagdad, 1877-1882. It is of Gudea that the larger and more important part of the monuments of Telloh preserve the memory: eight statues, two large cylinders of clay, and hundreds of fragments or small texts-now in the Louvre. Gudea was king of Shirpurla, the modern Telloh, in Southern Babylonia, about B. C. 3 roo. This statue-one of eight-is designated $B$, and is covered all around with cuneiform inscriptions. The plate represents the right profile of the statue, with part of the inscription. The translation of the whole is as follows:

In the temple of the god Nin-girsu, his king, the statue of Gudea, the patesi of Shirpurla, who the temple Eninnu has constructed: i qa of fermented liquor, i qa of food, half a qa of . . . . , half a qa of . . . . such are the offerings which it institutes.

A Very Ancient Cuneiform Inscription

Next to the licroglyphic characters peculiar to Egypt, the cuneiform style of writing is probably the most ancient, of which any decipherable specimens have leen found. The inscription on the statue of Gudea, one of the Kings of Southern Babylonia, is a splendid example of the characters usel by the ancient and powerful Balylonians, who arrived at a consilerable state of eivilization and literary culture more than five thousand years ago, which carries us back, acenrding to Bible chromology, to almost the time of Noah.

Of this statue, neither in silver nor in alabaster nor in copper nor in tin nor in bronze let any one undertake the execution! Let it be of hard stone! let a sacristy be established, and of all that shall be brought there let nothing be destroyed! The statue which is before thee, O god Nin-girsu, the statue of Gudea, the patesi of Shirpurla, who the temple Eninnu of the god Nin-girsu has constructed, whosoever from the temple Eninnu shall remove (or) its inscription shall efface; whosoever shall break it, on the fortunate day of the commencement of the year, whoever in the place of my god, his god-and it is Nin-girsu who is my king-in the country shall invoke; (whoever) my judgments shall transgress, my gifts shall revoke; whoever in the recitation of my prayers shall suppress my name and insert his own; (whoever) of the Holy of Holies of the god Nin-girsu, my king, shall abandon the service (?) and shall not keep it (ever) before his eyes;-from the most distant days, of all men of noble race; of the patesis of Shirpurla who the temple Eninnu of the god Nin-girsu, my king have constructed, and who have made dedicatory inscriptions (?), the words of their mouth let no one change nor trangress their judgments! Of Gudea, the patesi of Shirpurla, whoever shall change his words or transgress his judgments, may the god Anna, may the god Ellilla, may the goddess Nin-gharsag, may the god Enki, whose word is unchangeable; may the god Enzu, whose name none pronounces;
THE KING'S ANATHEMA AGAINST DESPOILERS OF HIS TOMB

 may the god Nin-girsu, the king of weapons; may the goddess Nina, the mistress of interpretations; may the god Nindara, the royal warrior; may the mother of Shirpurla, the august goddess Gatumdug; may the goddess Bau, the lady, the elder daughter of Anna; may the goddess Ninni, the lady of battles; may the god Babbar, the king of abundance (?); may the god Pasag, the masterworkman of men; may the god Galalima, may the god Dunshagana, may the goddess Nin-marki, the eldest daughter of the goddess Nina; may the goddess Duzi-abzu, the mistress of Kinunir-ki; may my god Nin-gishzida, change his destiny! Like an ox, may he be slain in the midst of his prosperity! Like a wild bull may he be felled in the plenitude of his strength! As for his throne, may those even whom he has reduced to captivity overthrow it in the dust! To efface its traces (?), even of its memory (?), may they apply their care! his name, in the temple of his god may they efface from the tablets! May his god for the ruin of the country have no look (of pity)! May he ravage it with rains from heaven! May he ravage it with the waters of the earth! May he become a man without a name! May his princely race be reduced to subjection! May this man, like every man who has acted evilly towards his chief, afar, under the vault of heaven, in no city whatsoever find a habitation! Of the champion of the gods, the Lord Nin-girsu, the greatness may the people proclaim!
HITTITE INSCRIPTIONS

" $A$ considerable number of Hittite monuments have been found, which heip us to a clearer understanding of the history of this people than we could get from Biblical, Egyptian, and cuneiform data alone. At Carchemish and Hamath have been unearthed remains of sculptures accompanied by inscriptions, and elsewhere in this region, as at Zenjirli, there are abundant traces of Hittite art. Thanks to the rescarches of Jensen, it may now be regarded as certain that the inseriptions cover the period $1200-800 \mathrm{~B}$. C. It is fair to presume that the language of all the so-called Hittite inscriptions is the same, although it may be added that several styles of Hittite characters may be distinguished, some being pictorial, others branching off into conventional forms, with a strong tendeney towards becoming linear. The decipherment of the Hittite inseriptions which would throw so much needed light on the ethnic problems is now being vigorously prosecuted. After several attempts on the part of Sayce. Peiscr, and Halévy, which constituted an opening wedge, Jensen has reecntly struck a new path which gives promise of leading, ere long, to a satisfactory solution of the mystery. He has identified ideographs and sign groups for the names of countrics and gods, some of which appear to be established beyond reasonable doubt. So far as Jensen's decipherment has gone, the inscriptions-some thirty in all-contain little beyond the names and titles of rulers, lands, and gods, with bricf indication of conquests. The Ilittite seript appears to have been taken over from the Egyptian hieroglyphics, though it scems also cortain that it contains clements which are cither original or derived from some source that is still unknown."

The plate represents one of the stones found in Jerabis, or Carchemish. These stones are now in the British Museum, and we are indehted for them to George Smith and Consul Henderson. They are among the best specimens of Hittite inscriptions yet found. According to yensen, their date is between 950 and 750 B . C. There are four columns of inscription on the stone, only two of which are represented in the fac-simile.

Following is an attempt made by Peter Jensen to decipher the inscription:
I am -[ ]-z-s (name) of Carchemish the powerful, the king, the king, the $P$, the prince of the land, the priestking (?) the . . . z-T . . . . , one of the land, of Carchemish, the powerful, the king . . . . , one of the land of Carchemish, the powerful, of the king, ., . . of a . . . . a . . . . son . ..

HIMYARITIC INSCRIPTION OF HADAKAN

Himyaritic or Sabacan is a name applied to the former people of southwestern Arabia, or Yemen, and to the remains of their civilization, consisting of extensive ruins, with numerous inseriptions (the oldest from long before our cra). The language bolongs to the Arabic division of the West Semitic group, and has its nearest relative in the jdiom of the central and north Arabian Bedouins, raised to a literary language by Mohammed, but especially is the Ethiopic nearly related to it.

The present inscription was found by Eduard Glascr (who made four journeys to the East in the years $1885-86$, $1887-88$, and $1892-04$ [:] and brought back over a thousand inscriptions) in Fomen, South Arabia, in a village called Hadakan, near an estate now called Bait Mukbil Dugaish. The stone is kept in the royal museum of Berlin. It is 92 cm . (originally 94 cm , about 2 fect 6 in .) wide and 41 cm . high (about $\mathrm{I}_{4} \mathrm{in}$ ). When found it was walled into a recent building, and when taken out the left edge and lower part were gone. Eight lines are almost complete and a few obliterated traces of the ninth.

It is a dedicatory inscription in which the devotee declares that he dedicates to Talab his own person and his children and all his possessions. The reason for his action was probably containcd in that part of the inscription which is missing.

HOW TO USE THE THESAURUS $A N D$  A KEY TO PRONUNCIATION

HOW TO USE THE THESAURUS.

To the vast majority, the use of this Thesaurus Dictionary of the English Language presents no more difficulties, for lack of understanding the plan adopted, than does any dictionary; but as its purpose is not limited to defining words, its wider sphere and usefulness being to suggest particular words or phrases as they may be required to definitely express a given idea, a brief explanation of how its fullest benefits may be obtained is appropriate,

All vocabulary words are printed in brevier black face type; all definitions thereof appear in brever lower case Roman. The reference words are printed in brevier small caps, under which heads the person consulting the dictionary must look to find any particular word desired. Thus, for example, take any word in the vocabulary, there will be found immediately following the definition, words printed in small caps, which are the reference words. These words must be looked up in their alphabetical position in the vocabulary, and under them will be found groups containing the word examined and words of related significance Phrases and idioms are printed in black face type; foreign phrases appear in brevier italics, and their phonetic pronunciation, is parentheses, are in brevier lower case Roman. The foreign languages are indicated thus [F.]. meaning French; [It.], Italian; [G.], German; [Sp.], Spanish; [L.], Latin; [Gr.], Greek. Those translations which appear in the vocabulary proper are printed in brevier lower case Roman. Captions, to which the references direct, appear in capital letters, with positive and negative torms compounded, under which appear all associated words, printed in nonpareil black face type, and the definitions in nonpareil lower case Roman. The analysis of words, and their grammatical relationships, are printed under in nonpareil small caps. Captions, denoting parts of spech and their relationship, are in italics. By observing these explanations no difficulty will ever be encountcred in using the Thesaurus, or in obtaining the information which it is intended to supply.

A KEY TO PRONUNCIATION.

The English words printed in this Thesaurus are easily pronounced by any one giving attention to the accent marks at the end of syllables. The single accent mark-thus, '-indicates the primary inflection, or the syllable upon which the greater stress must be laid. The double accent mark-thus, "-shows the secondary inflection, directing that some stress shall be laid, hut less than that indicated by the primary accent.

The pronunciation of all foreign phrases is found in parentheses following. Note well these indications. Wherever the phonetic $a$ is found, it is to be pronounced as in sofa, partake; where the phonetic $u$ occurs, it indicates such a sound as $u$ in cup. The diphthong ai is sounded as ai in aisle and in pine; au as ou in the word house. When iv appears, it equals the sound in mute. The phonetic letter H equals the German sound in the word ach; the inverted period placed beside the letter $n$, in any French word, gives it a broad, nasal sound. Thus, bon is pronounced somewhat like ong, in song, except that the $g$ is silent; zh should generally be sounded as an aspirate, as gin mirage (mirazh').

Respellings for pronunciation have been given for all foreign words and phrases at their vocabulary places in this dictionary.

The Latin words have been pronounced according to the English method.
English words have been divided into syllables and the accented syllables marked.
In the respellings the ordinary Roman types have been used so far as possible.
Instead of using diacritics for peculiar sounds of a and $u$, the standard types of the American Philologicar, Association have been adopted.

The following letters have been used with values as indicated:

| :---: |
| 荵       웅 |

as in this. as in cup. as in rule. as in G. uber as in box. as in canyon. as in zebra. as in aisle. as ou in house. as in author.

Angularity-Scienific Terms.

Acute angle. An angle less than a right angle.
Altimetry. The art of measuring vertical angular slevations.
Angle of $45^{\circ}$. Half a right arigle.
Angular distance. The angle made at a given point by lines drawn to it from $\mathbf{t w o}$ oljects.
Angular elevation. In gumnery, the angle which the axis of the fura makes with the horizon.
Angular measurement. Measurement in angles.
Angular velocity. The rate at which an angle increases.
Clinometer. An instrument for neasuring angular inclination.
Cotangent. A trigonometric function
Cube. A solid body bounded by six equal square sides.
Decagon. A plane figure with ten angles and ten sides.
Diamond. A figure bounded by four equal straight sides and having two of its interior angles acute and two obtuse.
Dichotomy. Separation into two parts or branches; forking.
Dodecahedron. A solid having twelve plane faces.
Goniometer. An instrument for measuring angles.
Goniometry. The art of measuring angles.
Graphometer. Instrument used by surveyors in measuring angles.
Heptagon. A plane figure having seven angles and seven sides.
Hexagon. A plane figure having six angles and six sides.
Hexahedron. A solid bounded by six plane faces
Icosabedron. A solid bounded by twenty plane faces.
Lozenge. A parallelogram having its four sides equal and with two of its interior angles acute and two obtuse.
Miter. The function of two bodies upon a line bisecting the angle of junction, as at the corner of a picture frame.
Obtuse angle. An angle greater than a right angle.
Octagon. A plane figure having eight angles and eight sides.
Octabedron. A solid bounded by eight plane faces.
Octant. Eighth of a circle.
Parallelogram. A quadrilateral whose opposite sides are parallel.
Parallelopiped. A prism bounded by six faces, all parallelograms
Pentagon. A plane figure having five angles and five sides.
Peotahedron. A solid bounded by five plane faces

ANLMATION.

Platonic bodies. Five geometrical solids: the regular tetrahedron. the cube, the octahedron, the dodecahedron and the icosahcdro:t
Polygon. A plane figure having many angles and sides.
Prism. A solid whose bases are any similar, equal and paraliel plane figures, and whose lateral faces are parallelograms.
Pyramid. A solid whose base is a polygon and whose lateral faces are triangles meeting at a point called the vertex.
Quadrangle. A plane figure having four angles and four sides
Quadrant. An are of ninety degrees.
Quadrature. The relative position of two heavenly bodies distant from each other ninety degrees as viewed from the center of a third bady.
Quadrilateral. A plane figure bounted by four straight lines and having four angles.
Rectangle. A parallelogram having four risht angles.
Reentering angle. An angle in a fortificatum, the vertex of which is turned towards the prutected place.
Rhomb. A parallelogram having equal sides and oblique antles.
Rhomboid. A parallelogram having its opposite sides equal, but containing no right angle.
Right angle, etc. An angle whose sides are perpendicular to eas ho other ete See Erectness.
Salient angle. An angle in a fortification, the point of which is turned away from the protected place.
Sextant. An arc of sixty degrees. An instrument fir measuring angular distances
Spherical angle. An angle made by the intersection of two great circles. which mutually cut each other on the surface of a globe
Square A figure with four equal sides and four right angles.
Tetrahedron. A solid bounded by four triangles.
Theodolite. An instrument usel for measuring horizontal and vertical angles.
Triangle. Plane figure having three siles and three angles.
Trigon. A triangle: the triangle of reference employed in trilinear coordinates.
Trigonometry. The branch of mathensatics that treats of the relations of the sides and angles of triangles
Wedge. A right triangular prism with ont very acute angle Angularity-Verbs.

Bend. Deflect from a strai, ${ }^{\text {b }}$ t line
Bifurcate. Separate into two branches.
Crinkle. Form wrinkles, bends or folds.
Fork. Separate into diverging parts.
Angularity-Adectiecs.
Aduncous. Bent like a hook; hooked.
Akimbo. Having the hands on the hips and the ellows bent sharply outward.
Angular. Having an angle or angles; measured $1, y$ an angle Aquiline. Hooked: curving.
Bent. Turned from a straight line
Bifurcate. Forked.
Crinkled. Formed with filds, ritges or wrinkles
Crooked. Having angles: nut straight.
Cubical. Having the shape or properties of a cube.
Cuneiform. Wedge-shaped
Dovetailed. Interlocked by wedge-shaped tenons and spaces.
Falcated. Sickle-shape 1: scythe-shaped.
Falciform. Falcate; having the shape of a scythe or sickle.
Forked. Divided into diverging parts like a fork.
Furcated. Forked.

Fusiform. Spindle-shaped: tapering at each end.
Geniculated. Having knee-like joints.
Jagged. Having ragged edges or notches.
Kimbo. Crooked; bent.
Knock-kneed. Having the knees bent inward.
Multilateral. Having many sides and conserquently many angles.
Oblique, etc. Neither parallel to, nor at right angles from the base.
Polygonal, etc. Having many angles, etc. See Nouns.
Pyramidal. Of or like a pyramid.
Quadrangular. Having four angles.
Quadrilateral. Formed by four sides and having four angles.
Rectangular. Having one or more right angles.
Rhomboidal. Having the shape of a rhombuil.
Scalene. Having no two sides equal, said uf triangles.
Serrated. Notched along the edge like a saw:
Square. Having four right angles and fot requal sicies.
Triangular. Having three angles and tiree sides: butnded by a triangle.
Trigonal. Having three angles; thret-cornerel.
Trilateral. Having three sides.
Uncinated. Ilooked.
Wedge-shaped. Having the shape of a wedge.
Zigzag. Having short turns or angles alternating; is a series foum side to side.
an'-gu-lar-ness. State of being angular. Angulatity. angusta res domi [L.] (an-gus'ta rî do'-mai). In difficult circumstances. Affluence-Pentrig.

Gas. The aeriiorm state of matter
Glass tubing. Pipes made of glass.
Gold. Heavy, yellow, metallic element.
Graduate. A graduated vessel
Graham's law. The law that "the velocity of the diffusion of gases varies inversely as the square root of their specific gravaties," discovered by Thomas Graham ( $1805-18010$ ).
Graphic symbols. Symbuls ior representing chemical substances.
Graphite. Dark, metallic variety of carbon.
Hard water. Water containing minerals in solution
Hot blast. Hot air blown into a smelting-furnace.
Hydrochloric acid. Colorless, corrosive gas easily soluble in water
Hydrogen. Agaseous element, found ingreat abundance in the air
Hydrosid. Compound containing the hydroxyl group.
Hydrosulphite. A compound of hydrusulfurous acid and a base
Hydroxyl. A compound of one atom of hydrogen and one of oxygen
Inorganic chemistry. The chemistry of metals and non-metals ex cepting carbon.
Intermittent sadd filtration. Method of filtering water.
Iodin. Crystalline element giving off violet fumes when heated.
Iron. Common metallic element.
Isocyanid. A hydrocarbon compound with cyanugen.
Lavoisier (Antoine Laurent). French chemist (1743-1704), founder of molern chemistry.
Lead. Netallic element
Lithium. Mctaliic element, silver-white, and the lightest of metals
Mercury. Bright, inquid, metallic element.
Metal. A substance that is opaque and possesses a peculiar luster
Molecule. Smallest physical division of matter
Mortar. Mixture of sand and slaked lime.
Naphtha. Light, colorless, inflammable oil from bituminous shal
Nickel. Bright, hard, metallic element
Nitric acid. Colorless corrosive liquid.
Nitrogen. A gaseous, colorless, non-metallic elernent, conprisi-four-fifths of the atmosphere.
Organic chemistry. The chemistry of the compounds of carbon.
Oxid. Compound of oxygen.
Oxygen. A gaseous element furming twenty-three per cent (weight) of the atmosphere.
Ozone. Gastous element.
Periodic law. Law suggested by Newlands that the properties of an element are a periodic function of its atomic weight.
Physiological chemistry. Chemistry applied to physiology.
Platinum. Steel-gray metallic element.
Potable water. Drinkable water.
Practical chemistry. Same as Applieo Chemistry
Priestley's apparatus. Apparatus used in making oxygen. [EnglishAmerican, 1733-94]
Replacement. The operation of one substance taking the place of anuther in a compound.
Retort. Vessel used in distillation
Roasting. Process of heating ores
Safety-lamp. Lamp used without danger of explosion from gases Sait. Compound of a base with an acid.
Silica. Silicon dioxid found as quartz and sand.
Silver. White metallic element.
Slag. Refuse from a blast-furnace
Sodium. Silver-white alkaline metallic element
Specific gravity. The comparative weight of unit wolumes
Spectroscope. An instrument for forming and analyzing the spectra of rays given off by substances
Steel. Compound chiefly of iron and carbon.
Substitution. Same as Replacement.
Sugar. Sweet crystalline compound made chiefly from sugar-bects and sugar-cane
Sulfate. Compound of a base with sulfuric acid
Sulfur. Yellowish, crystalline, non-metallic element.
Sufuric acid. Oily, colorless, corrosive liquid compounded of hydrogen, sulfur, and oxygen.
Test-tube. Slender tube of glass, used in making experiments.
Tin. White metallic malleable element.
Tripod. Stand having three legs.
Tungsten. Grayish, heavy, metallic element.
Water. Colorless liquid compounded of hydrogen and oxygen
Welsbach lamp. Gas-lamp in which the light is made by the gas heating a gauze made of several elements.
Zinc. Grayish white metallic element.
Zincite. Zinc ore.
Zincolysis. Decomposition of zinc compounds by electrolysis in which the action is referred to the zinc element
Chemistry-Verbs.

Absorb. Totake up by chemical action
Coagulate. Tu change into a curdlike state by chemical reaction.

Concentrate. Toincrease the strength of Crystallize. To assume a sohd and symmetrical form.
Decompose. To undergo dissulution.
Diffuse. To cause to flow out and ningle chemically
Displace. To remove one chenical element by another.
Distil. To extract by vaporization and condensation.
Effloresce. The act of becoming powdery
Electrolyze. To resolve into chemical elements by electricity.
Electrotype. To make facsimile plates by an electrolytic process.
Explode. To transform suddenly intogas or vapor.
Filter. To remove impurities by passing through a porous substance.
Ignite. To set on fire.
Invert. To undergo rearrangernent of the molecular structure.
Liberate. To free from chemical union.
Oxidize. To combine with oxygen.
Replace. To substitute one element for another in a chemical union.
Rust. To become affected with a reddish or yellowish oxid.

Chemistry-Adjectives.

Acetic. Pertaining to vinegar.
Ferric. Pertaining to iron.
Inflammable. That can be set on fire.
Insoluble. That cannot be dissolved in a fluid.
Sulfuric. Pertaining to sulfur.
chem'-i-type. Relief plate for a map produced by chemical processes. Chemistry che-mol'-y-sis. Chemical analysis. Chemistry.

Armature．Coil of conducting wire rotated near the magnet of a dyna－ mo；piece of soft iron connecting the poles of a horseshoe magnet．
Battery．A number of electric cells，dymamos，etc．，coupled so as to give a single current．
Cathode．The negative pole of a batters：
Cell．One element of a voltaic battery．
Charge．Quantity of electricity produced or used in something．
Chronograph．Electrical instrument for measuring time．
Circuit．Course passed through by an electric current．
Conductor．Medium for conveying electricity．
Current．Flow of electricity．
Dielectric．Substance transmitting electricity by induction rather than by conduction．
Discharge．The flow of electricity from one pole to another when connected by a conductor．
Dyoamo．Machine for producing an electric current．
Electric bell．Bell rung by an electrical appliance．
Electric light．Light produced by an electric current．
Electric motor．Motor run by electricity
Electric railway．Railway on which electricity is used as the motive force
Electric telegraph．Apparatus for transmitzing messages，run by electricity．
Electricution．Exccution by means of electricity．
Electrification．Process of electrifying．
Electrobiology．Science of electric currents in living organisms．
Electrocution．See Electricution．

Magnetic whirls．Lines of force around an electrical conductor．
Magnetism．The property shown in some substance of attraction and repulsion of others．cte．
Magnetization．State of being magnetized

ELECTRICITY-Associated Words-Contmurd

Motor That which cummunicatesmotion.
Ohm. The umat measure of chetrical sesostance
Ohrn's law. Law of clectrification disetwered by Ohm
Polarization. Inactivity of a cell caused by eats cillectinge on the negative Ilate.
Pole. Puint of greatest magnetic ur electric fore
Radiograph. An instrument ior thotupraphions ilijects through oparue substances; the X ray Rheotome. Contrivance for rapidly making and hreakme a circuit
Solenoid. Helix with one of the wites extendnn: hach ienpethwise through the inside.
Tasimeter. Instrament formasuring changes inclectromotive fure
Trolley. Grooved wheel formingt the connection between at car and the wire carrying the current.
Volt. The unt of electric firce
Voltaic pile. Kind of cell invented by Volta.
Volt-ampere. Rate of worknet in a circuit of note ampere having one volt potential.
Volt-columb. The crergy necessary to raise the poteritalal of one columb one volt.
Volt-meter. Instrument for measuring the electromotive forcear widts
Watt. See Volt-Ampere.
Wireless telegraphy. Sending of messages without the use of wire conductors

Elbctricity-Verbs.
Break the circult. To disconnect a conductor.
Make the circuit. To make connections in a conductor.
